

FOREWORD

This brief survey of Shasta County is not intended to be a definitive county history. Much has been culled to assure brevity, a fact which undoubtedly has resulted in the minimizing and outright omission of important materials. In the teaching of the local aspects of the westward movement to students in United States history and in talking to those interested in the Shasta County story, I have felt that the writing of a summary account could be helpful. This study has sought to emphasize the recent and, I believe, very important local happenings since World War II, as well as the story of the colorful past in Shasta County history. In addition, the booklet attempts to stress those areas of county history about which little study has been made. This is why, for instance, so much detail is presented on the growth of Anderson, while the chapter on mining is simply a summary. The arrangement of the pamphlet is topical with somewhat of an eye to chronology. Probably the most valuable part of the booklet is the bibliography located in the back. To curtail size, I have neglected footnoting, in the hope that the bibliography will give sufficient information to someone interested in the source materials.

If a complete list of acknowledgments for help in the writing of this study was compiled, it would indeed be lengthy. Librarians, including those at the Shasta County Library, Bancroft Library at the University of California, the California State Library and Sutter's Fort Museum at Sacramento, as well as the curator of the Shasta State Monument at Shasta; newspaper people, including those at the Anderson Valley News and Redding Record-Searchlight, and many individuals, in particular the members of the Shasta County Historical Society, have all been of assistance. I would especially like to express my appreciation to Roy Ballou, Madie Donnally, Bertha Day, James Dotta, Edna B. Eaton, Judge Richard B. Eaton, John Hamilton, Denver Jamerson, Myrtle McNamar, Ernest Neasham, California Quint, Judge Albert F. Ross, Arnold Rummelsburg, Ben Stroup and Thomas Thatcher. Each of these people read and made suggestions concerning chapters within this study about which they have special knowledge. In addition, much of this study was read and helpfully criticized by Professors G. D. Lillibridge and Clarence McIntosh of Chico State College, as well as by Cecil Rhodes, a fellow history teacher at Anderson Union High School. I would like to acknowledge the helpful suggestions of Professor Alexander DeConde, formerly of the University of Michigan, in the area of research methods. In conclusion, I would like to also thank my wife for her help and encouragement which was continuous throughout the writing.
